NEW SHERIFF IN TOWN

100 / 18 JUL 2025 / GENIUS ACT / RARE

NEW RULES. SAME FRONTIER.

At dusk, a sheriff stands beside a fresh notice on a timber wall. An older wanted poster still peeks out above it.

On 18 July 2025, President Donald Trump signed the GENIUS Act into law. Its subject was payment stablecoins: digital assets designed for payment or settlement, with an issuer's obligation to redeem them for a fixed monetary value. The law established a framework for their issuance and supervision, including federal and qualifying state regulatory paths.

For permitted issuers, the Act sets requirements for at least one-to-one backing with specified liquid reserves, public redemption policies and monthly disclosures of reserve composition. Behind the familiar promise of a stable value, Congress set out concrete obligations about the assets held and the information customers could see.

Signing began a new chapter rather than completing the rollout. Rulemaking and the Act's effective-date provisions left implementation work ahead, and payment stablecoins were not made government-guaranteed money. The notice on this wall names a specific part of the market, not every token in town.

The hundredth card leaves the street open beyond the porch. A new rulebook has arrived; the frontier continues.

DETAILS IN THE ART

01 THE SHERIFF'S STAR

A plain gold star catches the sunset against the navy coat. The new sheriff gives regulatory oversight a familiar frontier face.

02 THE NOTICE ON THE WALL

GENIUS ACT, PAYMENT STABLECOINS and 18 JUL 2025 keep the event, statutory subject and signing date visible together.

03 THE OLDER WANTED POSTER

The Cryptoqueen from 044 reappears on the WANTED poster behind the new notice. This collection callback brings an earlier unresolved story onto the final card's wall.

04 THE OPEN FRONTIER

The timber porch opens onto a street that continues towards the distant hills, leaving the frontier visible beyond the sheriff and the new notice.
